Part I

Introduction

The Cooperative Congressional Election Study, or CCES, seeks to study how Americans view Congress and hold their representatives accountable during elections, how they voted and their electoral experiences, and how their behavior and experiences vary with political geography and social context. This panel study constructed a very large sample capable of capturing variation across a wide variety of legislative constituencies over a two year period.

The 2010 CCES interviewed over 55,400 adults who answered a common battery of questions before and after the election. The 2010-2014 Panel Study includes a subset of 9,500 of these respondents who were re-interviewed before and after the 2012 presidential election and again before and after the 2014 congressional election. The pre- and post-election common content questionnaire from 2010 was repeated for these respondents in 2012 and 2014.

This guide describes the methodology behind the overall study and the measures and variables developed for the Common Content for the 2010-14 Panel Study. There are five parts to the CCES Common Content – sample identifiers (including state and congressional district), profile questions (largely demographic), pre-election questions, post-election questions, and contextual data (including candidate names and parties, election results, and roll call votes). This codebook provides question wordings, values, and frequencies presented of the variables for the Common Content dataset. In the dataset, each of these questions include a “_10” or “_12” or “_14” suffix or a “CC14,” “CC12,” or “CC10” prefix to indicate whether the variable refers to the value from the 2010, 2012, or 2014 wave of the panel study.

What’s New in Version

This second release of the 2010-2014 CCES Panel Study includes the vote validation variables for the 2010 general election and primary election, the 2012 vote validation variables for the general election, presidential primary, and congressional primary, and the 2014 vote validation variables for the general election and primary election. It also incorporates updated Zip code variables to include 2010 and 2012 PRE and POST registered zip code information. Furthermore, we now expand the data to include all questions asked in 2010, 2012 and 2014 whether they were present or not in the questionnaires for the previous or subsequent survey wave. The first release only featured data regarding questions that were asked in all three survey waves, which asked the exact same questions.

Please use the following table as a reference guide to identify which variables are or are not available in the 2010, 2012 and 2014 waves of the CCES Panel Study.

Sampling Methodology

The panel study survey was conducted over the Internet by YouGov. The Common Content in 2010 was asked of 55,400 adults interviewed in October 2010 (for pre-election data), and in November 2010 (for post-election data). The sampling method used YouGov’s matched random sample methodology (see below). This approach has been validated in a number of published studies.¹

The 2010 publicly released common content file included 55,400 pre-election interviews and 46,935 respondents who completed both waves of the 2010 interviews. However, this figure is actually much smaller than the base pool of respondents we were able to draw from in 2012 since YouGov routinely interviews more respondents than is required to fulfill a client’s requested sample size. Indeed, a total of 66,866 individuals responded to the 2010 CCES. In constructing our re-interviews for 2012, we started from this pool.

Sampling and sample matching

Sample matching is a methodology for selection of “representative” samples from non-randomly selected pools of respondents. It is ideally suited for Web access panels, but could also be used for other types of surveys, such as phone surveys. Sample matching starts with an enumeration of the target population. For general population studies, the target population is all adults, and can be enumerated through the use of the decennial Census or a high quality survey, such as the American Community Survey. In other contexts, this is known as the sampling frame, though, unlike conventional sampling, the sample is not drawn from the frame. Traditional sampling, then, selects individuals from the sampling frame at random for participation in the study. This may not be feasible or economical as the contact information, especially email addresses, is not available for all individuals in the frame and refusals to participate increase the costs of sampling in this way.

Sample selection using the matching methodology is a two-stage process. First, a random sample is drawn from the target population. We call this sample the target sample. Details on how the target sample is drawn are provided below, but the essential idea is that this sample is a true probability sample and thus representative of the frame from which it was drawn.

Second, for each member of the target sample, we select one or more matching members from our pool of opt-in respondents. This is called the matched sample. Matching is accomplished using a large set of variables that are available in consumer and voter databases for both the target population and the opt-in panel.

The purpose of matching is to find an available respondent who is as similar as possible to the selected member of the target sample. The result is a sample of respondents who have the same measured characteristics as the target sample. Under certain conditions, described below, the matched sample will have similar properties to a true random sample. That is, the matched sample mimics the characteristics of the target sample. It is, as far as we can tell, “representative” of the target population (because it is similar to the target sample).

When choosing the matched sample, it is necessary to find the closest matching respondent in the panel of opt-ins to each member of the target sample. Various types of matching could be employed: exact matching, propensity score matching, and proximity matching. Exact matching is impossible if the set of characteristics used for matching is large and, even for a small set of characteristics, requires a very large panel (to find an exact match). Propensity score matching has the disadvantage of requiring estimation of the propensity score. Either a propensity score needs to be estimated for each individual study, so the procedure is automatic, or a single propensity score must be estimated for all studies. If large numbers of variables are used the estimated propensity scores can become unstable and lead to poor samples.

YouGov employs the proximity matching method. For each variable used for matching, we define a distance function, $d(x,y)$, which describes how “close” the values x and y are on a particular attribute. The overall distance between a member of the target sample and a member of the panel is a weighted sum of the individual distance functions on each attribute. The weights can be adjusted for each study based upon which variables are thought to be important for that study, though, for the most part, we have not found the matching procedure to be sensitive to small adjustments of the weights. A large weight, on the other hand, forces the algorithm toward an exact match on that dimension.

Theoretical background for sample matching

To understand better the sample matching methodology, it may be helpful to think of the target sample as a simple random sample (SRS) from the target population. The SRS yields unbiased estimates because the selection mechanism is unrelated to particular characteristics of the population. The efficiency of the SRS can be improved by using stratified sampling in place of simple random sampling. SRS is generally less efficient than stratified sampling because the size of population subgroups varies in the target sample.

Stratified random sampling partitions the population into a set of categories that are believed to be more homogeneous than the overall population, called strata. For example, we might divide the population into race, age, and gender categories. The cross-classification of these three attributes divides the overall population into a set of mutually exclusive and exhaustive groups or strata. Then an SRS is drawn from each category and the combined set of respondents constitutes a stratified sample. If the number of respondents selected in each strata is proportional to their frequency in the target population, then the sample is self-representing and requires no additional weighting.

The intuition behind sample matching is analogous to stratified sampling: if respondents who are similar on a large number of characteristics tend to be similar on other items for which we lack data, then substituting one for the other should have little impact upon the sample. This intuition can be made rigorous under certain assumptions.

Assumption 1: Ignorability. Panel participation is assumed to be ignorable with respect to the variables measured by survey conditional upon the variables used for matching. What this means is that if we examined panel participants and non-participants who have exactly the same values of the matching variables, then on average there would be no difference between how these sets of respondents answered the survey. This does not imply that panel participants and non-participants are identical, but only that the differences are captured by the variables used for matching. Since the set of data used for matching is quite extensive, this is, in most cases, a plausible assumption.

Assumption 2: Smoothness. The expected value of the survey items given the variables used for matching is a “smooth” function. Smoothness is a technical term meaning that the function is continuously differentiable with bounded first derivative. In practice, this means that that the expected value function doesn’t have any kinks or jumps.

Assumption 3: Common Support. The variables used for matching need to have a distribution that covers the same range of values for panelists and non-panelists. More precisely, the probability distribution of the matching variables must be bounded away from zero for panelists on the range of values (known as the “support”) taken by the non-panelists. In practice, this excludes attempts to match on variables for which there are no possible matches within the panel. For instance, it would be impossible to match on computer usage because there are no panelists without some experience using computers.

Under Assumptions 1-3, it can be shown that if the panel is sufficiently large, then the matched sample provides consistent estimates for survey measurements. The sampling variances will depend upon how close the matches are if the number of variables used for matching is large.

Sampling frame and target sample

YouGov constructed a sampling frame of U.S. Citizens from the 2008 American Community Survey, including data on age, race, gender, education, marital status, number of children under 18, family income, employment status, citizenship, state, and metropolitan area. The frame was constructed by stratified sampling from the full 2008 ACS sample with selection within strata by weighted sampling with replacements (using the person weights on the public use file). Data on reported 2008 voter registration and turnout from the November 2008 Current Population Survey was matched to this frame using a weighted Euclidean distance metric. Data on religion, church attendance, born again or evangelical status, news interest, party identification and ideology was matched from the 2007 Pew U.S. Religious Landscape Survey. The target sample was selected by stratification by age, race, gender, education, and by simple random sampling within strata.

Stratification and matching

The sample drawn for the CCES were chosen from the YouGov PollingPoint Panel and the E-Rewards and Western Wats panels using a five-way cross-classification (age x gender x race x education x state). All respondents who completed the pre-election survey were re-invited to the post-election survey. The final set of completed pre-election interviews were then matched to the target frame, using a weighted Euclidean distances metric.

The following distance function was used for the match:

fmatch <- function(target, pool) {
  1.5*(abs(target$$gender - pool$$gender)) +
  (abs(target$$age - pool$$age)/30) +
  0.5*(target$$age3b - pool$$age3b) +
  10*(target$$race4 != pool$$race4) +
  (target$$region != pool$$region) +
  (abs(target$$educyrs - pool$$educyrs)/6) +
  0.5 * (target$$newsint != pool$$newsint) +
  (mat.marstat5.marstat5[target$$marstat5,pool$$marstat5]/4) +
  1.5 *(target$$pid5 != pool$$pid5) +
  (target$$ideo5x != pool$$ideo5x) +
  (target$$majrelg != pool$$majrelg)/2 +
  (mat.churatd.churatd[target$$churatd8,pool$$churatd8]/10) +
  (mat.income.income[target$$income,pool$$income]/15) +
  4*(mat.votereg.votereg[target$$votereg,pool$$votereg]) +
  (mat.cbsa3.cbsa3[target$$cbsa3,pool$$cbsa3]/2)

Where the matching variables were:

- Gender: respondent's gender
- Age: respondent's age in years
- Age3b: categorical age variable with categories 18-29, 30-64, and 65+
- Race4: categorical race variable with categories white, black, Hispanic/Latino, and other
- Region: Census region
- Educyrs: years of education
- Newsint: interest in politics
- Marstat5: marital status
- Pid5: party identification with categories, Democrat, Independent leaning Democrat, Independent, Independent leaning Republican, Republican, and other
- Ideo5x: 5-point ideology

- Majrelg: Pew religion recoded into the following categories: evangelical protestants, mainline protestants, black protestants, Catholics, other Christians, other faiths, and unaffiliated
- Churatd: 6-point church attendance
- Income: household/family income
- Votereg: voter registration status
- Cbsa3: metropolitan statistical area (metro or non-metro)

For unordered variables, matrices of distances were used, as indicated above.

Weighting

The matched cases were then weighted to the sampling frame using propensity scores. The matched cases and the frame were combined and a logistic regression was estimated for inclusion in the frame. The propensity score function included age, years of education, gender, and turnout. The propensity scores were grouped into deciles of the estimated propensity score in the frame and post-stratified according to these deciles. The final weights were then post-stratified by gender, race, education, and age. Weights larger than 7 were trimmed and the final weights normalized to equal sample size.

By sample matching on registered and unregistered voters we can create a nationally representative sample of US adults using appropriate sample weights. Approximately three fourths of US adults are registered to vote. In midterm elections approximately half of registered adults vote. Surveys tend to experience over reporting of voting behavior. The American National Election Study surveys for 2004 and 2002 report that approximately 78.5% of respondents said they voted in the 2004 general election, and 71.5% said they voted in the 2002 midterm election. Actual turnout numbers were in the range of 53% in 2004 and 42% in 2002. In the 2010 CCES 62.6% report voting (after weighting and accounting for non-voter dropoff between waves) and 87.0% report being registered to vote in the pre-election survey.

Post-stratification weights were created using entropy balancing (Hainmueller 2012) are included in the dataset under the variable name “weight.”

Vote Validation

The dataset includes variables relating to vote validation that was conducted for each wave of the study. Validation was conducted using data from Catalist (see Ansolabehere and Hersh 2012 for more information). The matching of respondents to the Catalist file was typically conducted 6-8 months after the election.

There are three variables related to this validation for 2010, 2012 and 2014.

Variable Name	Description
validated_reg_10	Validation of whether R is registered to vote in 2010
VV_general_10	Validation of whether R voted in the 2010 general election
VV_primary_10	Validation of whether R voted in the 2010 primary election
validated_reg_12	Validation of whether R is registered to vote in 2012
VV_general_12	Validation of whether R voted in the 2012 general election
VV_primary_12	Validation of whether R voted in the 2012 primary election
validated_reg_14	Validation of whether R is registered to vote in 2014
VV_general_14	Validation of whether R voted in the 2014 general election
VV_primary_14	Validation of whether R voted in the 2014 primary election

The validation measures indicate whether the respondent was a validated voter, the method by which the respondent voted (when available), and whether the respondent was matched to the Catalist file but did not vote. Those individuals flagged as “unmatched” in these variables should not necessarily be considered non-voters. The “unmatched” designation simply indicates that we were unable to match the respondent to a record in the Catalist vote file. Please note that though the state of Virginia keeps public records regarding voter registration it does not keep public records of electoral participation.

Part III

Panel Attrition and Conditioning

Attrition is one of the most serious challenges for panel survey collection. The 2000-2004 ANES panel successfully retained just 748 of their 1,807 original respondents (41%) across all five waves of the study; 59% of respondents completed the first three years of the panel. Attrition can cause problems for researchers because of the loss of statistical power resulting from a reduced sample size and the fact that attrition rates are higher from some groups than for others. For example, non-whites and those with higher levels of residential mobility are significantly more likely to leave survey panels than whites. This issue causes an imbalance in a panel, leading some groups to be overrepresented while others are underrepresented.

Our approach to building a multi-year panel addressed both of these concerns through the study design and by taking advantage of the techniques that YouGov uses to generate their samples. With most panels, an initial sample is collected and then the researchers attempt to re-contact all respondents. Typically, attrition in this context is caused by the refusal of some respondents to be re-interviewed; thus, attrition constitutes a form of selection bias. Survey researchers generally attempt to address this bias using a combination of statistical approaches and the addition of new respondents to the panel to re-balance the sample. Unfortunately, refreshing the panel with new respondents is of limited benefit since these new respondents cannot be used for any analyses that require responses across all time periods.

Analysis of Panel Attrition

The sample selection issues introduced by attrition rates become more severe as the size of the initial sample grows smaller. Thus, because the ANES panel began with just 2,360 recruits, attrition rates reduced the sample to just 578 respondents who completed each wave. Fortunately, we start with a much larger base of panelists who completed the pre- and post-election surveys in 2010.

As noted above, in 2012 YouGov attempted to re-interview approximately 83% of those who took the 2010 survey. The response rate among these 55,172 attempted re-interviews was 52.9% for the pre-election survey (and 44% for those answering both the pre- and post-election waves in 2012). For the 2014 wave, YouGov attempted to re-interview 22,346 respondents who had completed both the 2010 and 2012 waves. They successfully completed interviews with 15,252 panelists (68% of those they attempted to re-contact).

While the level of attrition was relatively low, it is also important to be attentive to differential attrition among particular subgroups. Indeed, one of the most significant issues with panel attrition is that some groups are more prone to attrition than others. Table 1 includes an unweighted demographic comparison of the 2010 CCES sample from which the 2012-2014 panelists were recruited to those who were included on the 2010-2014 panel dataset. On many of the measures, the differences between the base sample and the panel are rather small. Importantly, there do not appear to be any partisan differences in attrition rates. However, there are some groups within which attrition was more likely. In particular, minority attrition rates were larger than those for whites, leading the re-interview sample to under-represent black and Hispanic respondents. Additionally, voters were much more likely to be successfully re-contacted compared to non-voters.

While the 2010-2014 re-interview sample has a smaller percentage of non-voters and minorities as a consequence of attrition, the large size of the panel makes this issue manageable. Take the African-American population as an example. While we lost a significant proportion of African Americans from our first sample, we still have 581 African Americans who completed all waves of the survey. Such a sample is more than sufficient to engage in meaningful analysis of that group.

Analysis of Panel Conditioning

An additional concern with panel data is panel conditioning. Panel conditioning occurs when the act of being repeatedly surveyed changes respondents' behaviors, traits, or opinions. For example, Bartels (1999) finds that panel conditioning led ANES panelists to report more interest in the campaign and an increased likelihood of voting than they would have if they had not been on the panel. While little can be done to avoid panel conditioning, the design of our study allows us to detect and adjust for potential panel conditioning effects. Since our study was conducted alongside the cross-sectional CCES module in 2010, 2012, and 2014, those cross-sections can be used as a baseline to detect any measures on which panel conditioning may have occurred.

The figure below shows the difference between responses to identical questions asked in the 2014 wave of the CCES panel study and the 2014 CCES cross-sectional study. Each variable has been scaled to range between 0 and 1; thus, a difference of 0 indicates that there was no difference between the studies and a difference of 1 (or -1) is the largest difference possible. With such a large sample size, the error bars are quite small, thus there are many statistically significant differences in the figure. However, the differences are almost uniformly small in magnitude; there are only two cases where the panel results departed from the cross-sectional results by more than .05. The bottom line in the figure shows the average difference across all measures; its magnitude is less than .02. Thus, the 2014 panel sample appears to have only small differences from the 2014 CCES cross-sectional study.

While there are few large differences between the panel and the cross-section on attitudinal measures, we might expect to see panelists expressing opinions at a higher rate (rather than answering don't know or not sure) than those in the cross-section. Additionally, we might expect conditioned panelists to have more knowledge about politics. Figure 2 presents some preliminary support for the latter expectation, but none for the former. Indeed, panelists did not appear to be substantially less likely to avail themselves of the "not sure" option when asked whether they approved of various politicians/institutions or to place those politicians/institutions on the ideological scale. On the other hand, panelists were significantly more likely to know which party controlled the House or Senate. Given the lack of any other conditioning effects, we suspect that the knowledge difference actually stems from the greater attrition among non-voters described above.

Overall, our 2012 re-interviews revealed the types of attrition that would be anticipated. Fortunately, the large size of our panel ensures more than sufficient power for dealing with these issues with the solutions offered by Bartels (1999) and others. Indeed, the large sample size not only makes dealing with the problem of attrition manageable, but it also ensures our ability to draw meaningful inferences about how time and changes in district boundaries affect important subsets of the population.

Part IV

Common Content

This section presents information on all common variables included in the 2010, 2012, and 2014 waves of the CCES. These variables all originally appeared as part of the 2010 CCES Common Content and were then repeated in 2012 and 2014. The survey consists of six types of variables. First, sample identifiers include region, state, county, congressional district, zip code, and designated market area (DMA). Second, Profile Questions consist of background data on individual respondents collected before the fielding of the survey, and include most demographics as well as indicators of party identification and ideological orientation. Unless otherwise noted, Profile Questions were administered prior to the fielding of the Pre-Election survey. Third, Pre-Election Questions were asked in the pre-election wave in October. They are denoted CC10_3xx for the 2010 version of the question, CC12_3xx for the 2012 version, and so on. Fourth, Post Election Questions were asked over the two weeks immediately after the election. They are denoted CC10_4xx for the 2010 wave and CC12_4xx for the 2012 wave, and so on. Fifth, the survey is linked to contextual information about representatives, candidates, and elections. Most of these contextual variables are contained in separate files (to conserve memory) and will be available at the CCES website.

The remainder of this guide presents the sections of the survey in the order in which the variables occur in the dataset.
